Stephanie S. Kasuboski, M.A.
Associate Professor, English as a Second Language

Stephanie S. Kasuboski is an Associate Professor, English as a Second Language at Cuyahoga Community College (Tri-C®). Professor Kasuboski has taught full-time at Tri-C since 2011, and taught as an adjunct instructor and lecturer since 2002.

Prior to joining Tri-C, Professor Kasuboski taught at the University of Delaware, George Mason University, and the English Language Institute at Case Western Reserve University.

Professor Kasuboski earned a B.A.A.S. from the University of Delaware with a major in Languages and Literature and a minor in Business Administration. She also earned an M.A.A.S. from the University of Delaware with a major in Applied Linguistics and a minor in French Literature.

Speech Topics:

- Inter-Cultural Communication: Beyond the words that we use, there are many nuances to communication that can be confusing between cultures. Slang, non-verbal communication, texting language, and cultural differences can all impact the way our communication is understood. This speech can be tailored for international and English as a Second Language students, or for Americans seeking to better understand international populations.

- Verbal and Non-Verbal Communication – In many cultures, non-verbal communication such as body language, facial expressions and tone of voice send strong messages to your listener about the emotions behind your words. This speech will help you understand which gestures and expressions are appropriate, and not, in multi-cultural interactions.